Product	The rubric calls for the creation of a work product, but the requirements are ambiguous or absent, and differences among performance levels are unclear. The teacher values process to the exclusion of product.	The rubric requires the creation of a work product, but there is no objective feedback that leads to improved product development through the submission of multiple drafts.	The rubric requires the teacher to objectively evaluate the student's work product using a clear assessment rubric.	The rubric requires the teacher to objectively evaluate the student's work product using a clear assessment rubric. There is also evidence that the students can, independently and in groups, use the rubric to revise and improve the product.
Process	The rubric's process requirements are ambiguous, and differences among performance levels are not clear.	The rubric's process requirements are inconsistent, and students have difficulty using the rubric to improve their work.	The rubric has clear process requirements, and students can differentiate performance levels based on the rubric.	The rubric not only evaluates the end product but also student work through every step of the process. As a result of this feedback, there is evidence that students are improving their methods, processes, and products.
Collaboration	The rubric requires students to work in complete isolation, without the aid or feedback of other students or teachers. Getting hints, suggestions, or ideas from other students is strictly forbidden.	The rubric allows for collaborative or group work, but it includes no guidelines for evaluating the process of collaboration.	The rubric requires a portion of the project to be group based. It establishes clear guidelines as to how group collaboration works and how students share responsibilities for the process and product.	The rubric establishes guidelines for collaboration, including specifying which elements of the team product are the work of individual students, the work of two or three students, and the work of the entire team. It is clear from the rubric that great performance is a combination of work by individuals, pairs, and larger teams.
Practice and Error	The rubric promotes one-thought attempts at performance. The ideal submission is error free and done right the first time it is submitted to the teacher.	The rubric allows for redrafting work products that are not acceptable on the first attempt.	The rubric requires multiple drafts of work products, with students using the rubric to improve performance.	The rubric requires multiple drafts, and there is clear evidence that students learn from their mistakes. The ideal work is never error free but full of learning that results from a virtuous cycle of error, feedback, reflection, and improvement.
