

12 Angry Men essay

12 Angry Men is a film about 12 Men discussing a crime case about an 18 years old Latino boy killing his father. There are 12 men also known as jurors which decide if it is guilty?. As the film goes forward they start voting if the boy is guilty or not which at the end they decide is not guilty. Each juror represents a different person from society the different thoughts and beliefs.

There are two version of 12 angry men, a black and white version which was made on 1957 and a colour version which was made on 1997. The two versions have similarities and differentials.

There are obvious similarities in the use of mise-en-scène between the 1957 version and the 1997, because the room that they vote and discuss is exactly the same situated for example the bathroom is on the same position and part of the room as well as the windows.

In both versions the weather is the same because is the hottest day of the year with no air conditioner. The characters are sweating in both version and have their clothes wet because they sweat. The characters are agitated because of the weather and because they are trying to finish as quick as possible to get out from there. They also both have high key lighting which shows is not a scary movie. The characters in the way they comport are pretty much similar just a few changings. In the old and new film are talking about the knife which the boy "killed" his father and they also sit around a big table with papers on it. In both versions, black and white and colour films juror number 11 is an East European man.

There are also differences in the use of mise-en-scène between the 1957 version and the 1997 version because the society have change during those 40 years, the costumes of the characters are different for example in the 1957 version all the jurors were wearing smart suit to show that they are gentlemen and they are high class when in the 1997 version there was only the old man wearing a smart suit but the rest of them were wearing casual clothes such as tracksuit, shirts and jeans etc. .

The characters in the black and white, and colour film are different in the way they look because in the new one they have black people or afro Americans and accept other races when in the old one have only white people. The judge from the old film is a Man when in the new film is Woman this is because in 1957 women didn't have rights and in 1997 women had rights. The Man is more sever when the Woman is more calm and talking more polite. The jurors as I said are similar in terms of how they act but Juror 10# is complete different because in the old film he was more polite and calmer when in the new one is aggressive start shouting and doesn't let people finish their point. He is also white on the old one when in the new one is black and is Muslim.
