

rather than facts. We don't have a solid name or a date. We know he had no money and "nothing particular to interest" him on shore but we don't know why. The only solid facts we have in this characterization of Ishmael are these:

First, the suffering severe depression whiplashingly covers. His reasoning is given for this psychological portrait, only the emotionalization of the character in a negative tone created by dark death-related imagery. Ishmael is suicidal as evidenced in two descriptions, "Afterward I had myself involuntarily pausing, before coffin warehouses, and bringing up the rear of every funeral I meet." Suicidal thoughts are also given a fancy Roman history allusion in his referencing the suicide of Cato. But it is not merely a suicidal depression that characterizes Ishmael, he also exhibits violent tendencies, "prevented me from deliberately stepping into the street, and methodically knocking people's hats off." However, this is not just the setup of a character who will wallow in his depression and anger, Ishmael has, for thinks he has a remedy for his ailment, he must go to sea.

Second, Ishmael firmly believes that going to sea will either cure his depression and anger issues or at least get him away from what he perceives to be the cause. While we are not given the exact cause of his mental unrest, it seems to be location based on land. This seems to be a classic push-pull motivation for change. The push of his depression and anger and the pull of his love of the sea. Even his descriptions of land are based on their proximity to the sea. He says of Manhattan, "Right and left, the streets told you waterward" as if the very streets of Manhattan are also following his escape route to the sea.

This is not just the self-characterization of one perhaps unreliable man, Ishmael affirms his claim to all men when he says, "almost all men [...] same feelings toward the ocean with me." He is putting forth the idea that his depression and anger along with the cure of going to sea is an almost universal state of humanity, at least for men. This is further bolstered by his portrayal of the "torments of water-gazers" at the battery in New York City. He's bringing his problem and solution from an individual issue to a global issue. Manhood, suffering from the angst of being on land, can all be cured by going to sea.

- Why-essay this is a score of a 5 or a 6 on the AP rubric:
- 1. The introductory paragraph clearly addresses the prompt using the key word technique.
- 2. A clear thesis is present, plausible, and defensible. Emotions make up the bulk of our introduction to Ishmael and these emotions are closely tied to the pull the setting had on the psychological state of the character. Ishmael's characterization exists primarily in relationship to where he is, on land or at sea.
- 3. Specific literary elements are listed in the thesis, explained, analyzed, and given examples for in the essay: invoking some dark imagery, setting. Further complex literary elements are discussed in body paragraphs like the reliability of the narrator and psychological aspects of characterization.
- 4. There is a wide variety of support from the literature in the form of quotes and paraphrasing.
