

Analysis Of Okonkwo As A Tragic Hero

"A man doesn't become a hero until he can see the root of his own downfall" as Aristotle once said. In the book Things Fall Apart by Chinua Achebe, Okonkwo is used to portray Achebe's own characterization of a tragic hero. A tragic hero as defined by Aristotle, is a character who makes a judgement error that inevitably leads to his or her own downfall which is portrayed by Okonkwo towards the end of the novel when he takes his own life. It could be argued that Okonkwo was solely a victim of fate while on the other hand, people say Okonkwo's actions are what led to his downfall. Okonkwo can be deemed a tragic hero because he fits Aristotle's criteria of a tragic hero by being a respected and successful leader in Umuofia, he has a tragic flaw, and he discovers his fate soon after his actions.

Aristotle's criteria of a tragic hero require the person to be virtuous and flawed, suffer a reversal of fortune, and to be a nobleman of high status. In this regard, as described by Achebe, "Okonkwo was well known throughout the nine villages and even beyond. His fame rested on solid personal achievements." With no inheritance from his father, Okonkwo started off as a sharecropper. With immense hard work, Okonkwo made his way up to wealthy and greatly respected man in Umuofia. From all of Okonkwo's hard work, he soon had three wives, many children, and a large stock of yams. With all of his achievements, Okonkwo earns respect from people outside and inside of his clan which made him even more popular. He amazed the people in the villages with the tasks he did. When he was only 18 years of age, he brought honor to Umuofia by throwing the Amalinze the Cat, a wrestler who has gone undefeated for seven years. In addition, Okonkwo is also one of the nine Ekwugwu which is a respected judge in the
