COMMENTS	This sample looks normal at this stage of things. Most metals are higher than last time, which a combination of break-in material and the much-longer oil interval can easily explain. Sealers and lubes are making their way out of the engine, evident in the lower silicon level. We'll look forward to aluminum and copper coming down next time, if you run a similar oil interval to this one. The oil itself is in good shape. The viscosity is in 5W/30 grade, and there's no fuel dilution or moisture contamination to point out. Insolubles show oil filtration had no trouble limiting solids.
