

Investigation: Anatomy of the Rat

Introduction

In this laboratory exercise, the anatomy of the rat will be examined in some detail. You may recall that in your first-year biology course you dissected a grass frog and a fetal pig. You may recognize and remember structures that you learned during that dissection. In Biology 3A, a much more detailed look at mammalian anatomy will be conducted. You will get to know and love your preserved rat over the course of this dissection.

The classification of the Rat (Rattus norvegicus)

Kingdom Animalia
Phylum Chordata
Subphylum Vertebrata
Class Mammalia
Order Rodentia
Family Muridae
Genus Rattus
Species Rattus norvegicus

The lab books and diagrams available to you are supplemental. Using the available material, instructions and diagrams, most students will be able to locate many structures for themselves. If after an earnest effort, you cannot find a structure, ask for assistance. Remember, this is a learning experience; it is quite permissible to discuss and observe other students' specimens. Compare your dissection with others, for animals often differ; be sure to look at animals of the opposite sex, you will be responsible for both sexes on the lab practical.

The specimen you will receive is a preserved double-injected specimen. Double injected refers to the arteries being filled with a red latex, and the veins being filled with blue latex. You will notice various incisions on the external surface of the rat where the latex was injected.

The rat is a vertebrate, which means that many aspects of its structural organization are common with all other vertebrates, including man. The similarity of structures among related organisms shows evidence of common ancestry. In a way, studying the rat is like studying a human. As the leading theme of this lab, ask yourself: for every structure observed in the rat, there is an equivalent structure in your own body - what is the structure and where is it located.

As the second leading theme, pay attention to the relationships among organs and groups of organs. Structural parts are not "just there" in random locations. Their specific layout within the body contributes to making certain functions possible. Therefore, for every structure seen, you should determine the following:

- What organ system it belongs to
- How it relates to other components
- Its general and specific function

For each "CHECKPOINT" have a member of your group snap a photo of your pinned specimen and use editing apps to label the image. You will upload each of these images to a shared folder on Google Classroom. All uploads should be submitted by: _____ (date)

Rat External Anatomy

Procedure: Obtain your rat. Rinse it off with water and place it in your dissecting pan to observe the general characteristics. Make sure you know each of the highlighted words.

The rat's body is divided into six anatomical regions; Locate the:

cranial region - head pectoral region - area where front legs attach abdomen - belly

cervical region - neck thoracic region - chest area pelvic region - area where the back legs attach
