

Salamander Classification & Dichotomous Key

Background: Scientists use dichotomous keys to identify organisms. It is a series of statements that allow the user to determine the identity of the organism from a set group of organisms. Each set of statements has two options (generally). The option that applies to the organism you are trying to identify will either tell you the next set of statements to refer to, or give you the identity of that organism.

Word Origin
Dicho = in two
Tomein = to cut
Dichotomous = to cut in

Below is a very simple example of a dichotomous key.
