Child abuse is a very common problem which calls for immediate solution. The help should be extended by specialists right away to the child. After a teacher receives a complaint of abuse from a child, a written statement is no longer necessary from the child, or one that requires the child to repeat the same allegation. The teacher should immediately report through telephone, and provide a supporting written report within a period of 36 hours. Such report should be presented in a way that is clear and complete with individual responsibility. Therefore, it should never be done in an anonymous way.

Both the report through telephone and the written report will still go through certain procedures. One, the telephone report needs to include details regarding the person creating the report, as well as complete information about the child who is suspected of being the victim. The details should afterwards be repeated by the person, and then approved by the teacher. A teacher should never contact the child or the parents, or make his or her own investigation. Such reports should never include personal opinions because those will hold no value.

As conclusion, the teacher holds responsibility for any type of information concealed, such as the details of the potential perpetrator. The actions and the response of the protective agency after the reports may also differ. A teacher needs to be always ready just in case the parents ask for details regarding the reasons in which the report on child abuse was created. The primary role of the teacher is to make sure that the report is created appropriately, legally, following the guidelines on abuse reporting. Any type of illegal action or incorrect details provided is also considered as violation to the law, with which the teacher can be held liable.
