

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 120 elderly people (60 men and 60 women) who were randomly divided into two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The control group received no intervention, while the intervention group received a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The physical fitness and HRQL of the participants were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher physical fitness and HRQL than the control group at the end of the 12-week training program. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of elderly people.
