management. Our interest in this paper is to determine whether the presence of a social network within a firm affects the firm's performance. We use a sample of 1,000 U.S. firms to examine the relationship between social network and firm performance. We find that firms with a social network have higher performance than firms without a social network. This relationship is stronger for firms with a larger social network. Our findings suggest that social network is an important factor in firm performance.
