The book highlights trends and patterns in the enactment and role of practical work across African countries. Practical work is regarded as intrinsic to science teaching and learning and the form of practical work that is strongly advocated is inquiry based learning which signals a definite paradigm shift from the traditional teacher dominated to a learner centered approach. The book provides empirical research on approaches to practical work contextual factors in the enactment of practical work and professional development in teaching practical work. African Civilisation on the Limpopo THOMAS N HUFFMAN., 2005 The Zoological Record, 2002 Ostrich Bibliography, 2001 Serpentine Geocology of Western North America Earl B. Alexander, Robert G. Coleman, Todd Keeler-Wolfe, Susan P. Harrison, 2006-11-02 Geocology is a fruitful interdisciplinary field relating rocks to soils to plant and animal communities and studying the interactions between them. Modern geocology especially concentrates on showing how geology and soils affect the structure, composition and distribution of plant communities in a certain research area. This book applies the principles of geocology to Western North America and to a specific kind of rock, the fascinating serpentine belts that run along the continental margins of the West Coast from Alaska to Baja. The authors come from different disciplines: Alexander is a soil scientist, Coleman a geologist, Harrison a biological researcher and Keeler-Wolfe a vegetation ecologist. It begins with an overview of the geology of this rock and this region covering mineralogy, petrology and stratigraphy of West Coast serpentine. It will continue with serpentine soils and their development and distribution and serpentine effects on plants and vegetation and animals. The serpentine geocology of the different regions of Western North America, concentrating on California, will conclude the study. So this academic book should appeal to plant ecologists, soil scientists, researchers in geocology and students in advanced courses in soil science.
