Questioning Cosmopolitanism

Stan van Hoof, Wim Vandekerckhove, 2010-06-16 Wim Vandekerckhove and Stan van Hoof The philosopher Diogenes the Cynic in the fourth century BCE was asked where he came from and where he felt he belonged He answered that he was a citizens of the world This made him the first person known to have described himself as a cosmopolitan A century later the Stoics had developed that concept further stating that the whole cosmos was but one polis of which the order was logos or right reason Living according to that right reason implied showing goodness to all of human kind Through early Christianity cosmopolitanism was given various interpretations sometimes quite contrary to the inclusive notion of the Stoics Augustine's interpretation for example suggested that only those who love God can live in the universal and borderless City of God Later the rediscovery of Stoic writings during the European Renaissance inspired thinkers like Erasmus Grotius and Pufendorf to draw on cosmopolitanism to advocate world peace through religious tolerance and a society of states That same inspiration can be noted in the American and French revolutions In the eighteenth century enlightenment philosophers such as Bentham through utilitarianism and Kant through universal reason developed new and very different versions of cosmopolitanism that serve today as key sources of cosmopolitan philosophy The nineteenth century saw the development of new forms of transnational ideals including that of Marx's critique of capitalism on behalf of an international working class
