Hopkins, 1993-01-31 This book reassesses the phenomenological controversy between Husserl and Heidegger over the proper status of the phenomenon of intentionality It seeks to determine whether Heidegger's hermeneutical critique of intentionality is sensitive to Husserl's reflective account of its Sachen selbst Hopkins argues that Heidegger's critique is directed toward the cogito modality of intentionality and therefore passes over its non-actional or horizontal dimension in Husserl's phenomenology As a result of this he concludes that Heidegger misinterprets Husserl's account of the intentional immanence exhibited by phenomenological reflection On the basis of these findings Hopkins suggests that the phenomenological methodology operative in the so called hermeneutic critique of transcendental consciousness itself involves transcendental presuppositions that are most appropriately characterized in terms of intentional and reflective phenomena      Étant donné Jean-Luc Marion,1997      De Husserl À Merleau-Ponty.
