

Escribiendo ensayos en español

Step by step guideline

Escribiendo ensayos en español

A good essay has a clear structure so the reader/teacher can read it with ease and understand the argument that they are presented with. Although planning it shouldn't take more than 10 minutes, this is a very important step that you should not miss.

Following the same steps and having a similar structure every time you write an essay will help you get used to it in preparation for your exam.

To begin with, when you have read the essay question at first, you should write a few sentences about it. You should then plan your essay in three different parts: introduction, main body and conclusion.

Consider what the main ideas that you want to discuss are and then in a sensible logical order. Include one idea per point. A convincing essay is built on strong and evidence supported points in order to inspire and convince the reader about your argument.

Although you shouldn't write full sentences/paragraphs at this point, your plan needs to be detailed and well structured. For instance, you could write key words related to the topic, listing points that you can use to connect the different points, examples and points that you think may be relevant. It is not more any good phrase that you remember in the past.

Now that we got the concept, straight away, avoid doing it in English and be able to translate that information correctly after.

Now that you are done with the planning, you can start writing your essay!

First, you need to introduce your essay, that is, you need to make clear what you are going to talk about. The context could have to do with:

- The story's historical or social background
- The characters and themes
- The author

Be very careful not to state your conclusion in the first paragraph.

Next, you should start by stating your main point or thesis as the first sentence of the essay. It should be a clear statement of what you are going to discuss. It could be a question or a statement. For example: "Do you agree with the author's opinion?" or "Do you agree with the author's opinion?" or "Do you agree with the author's opinion?"

In this part, you will need to state your thesis about the topic.

MAIN BODY

The main body is the part of the essay where you will discuss the topic. It is the longest part of the essay and you should be careful to write it in a clear and logical way. It is the part where you will discuss the topic and you should be careful to write it in a clear and logical way.

Remember, avoid using complex sentences that are not relevant to support your argument. Keep your sentences simple and clear, using strong and convincing evidence to support your argument.

Regarding the main body's structure, you might have to divide this part into different paragraphs. The number of paragraphs will depend on the number of main points you are going to discuss. It could be two paragraphs to show the "pro" and "con" sides of the argument or three paragraphs to show three main points. However, the most common structure is to have three paragraphs to show three main points. Each paragraph should start with the argument you are defending and then provide evidence to support it.

Try to keep a balance in terms of length between paragraphs. If the reader is presented with a paragraph that is too long, they will be confused by the ideas that you have.

Remember that for each point you should include relevant information and link each point to the next one. What is the argument? What is the evidence? How does it support the argument?

CONCLUSION

The aim of this final section is to restate the main point of the essay. It is the part where you will restate the main point of the essay and you should be careful to write it in a clear and logical way.

Restate what you have written in the first part, including additional information or evidence to support your argument. End your paragraph with a clear statement of your conclusion.
