While paleoanthropologists knew that the modern human had evolved from Africa, there had been very few archaeological remains found to prove this fact. This discovery not only helped find where they had lived, but also how they had lived. The artifacts helped depict a lifestyle much more modern than had ever been envisioned. These humans not only caught seafood like mussels and shellfish but also cooked it, over hot rocks.

From reading this article, a reader can infer—

- A. that scientists could easily prove modern humans came from Africa.
- B. that early humans knew a lot about fire.
- C. that paleoanthropologists mainly study the types of plants and meat that were eaten in prehistoric times.
