Course Summary

"Introduction to Philosophy" will introduce students to a survey of philosophical concepts and perspectives primarily from the Western tradition. We will examine primary sources (e.g. Aristotle, Hume,) and some contemporary responses and critiques. Throughout the course we will consider how these texts relate to our understanding of self, society, and the world. We will discuss theories of knowledge, ethics and political theory, and questions of meaning and existence. Through these investigations, students will develop their ability of critical reflection and evaluation. We will consider many issues including what it means to have purpose, how civic society should function, and whether we have ethical obligations or not; moreover, we will consider what ideas like freedom, good, and true mean for us. This course is by no means an exhaustive list of ideas or thinkers, but rather a very small sample to introduce you to the general and key concepts.

Course Goals

- 1- To examine the tradition of Western philosophical theory in order to understand the foundations of contemporary interpretations of concepts and their effects
- 2- To discuss the various strengths and weaknesses of these theories in promoting a particular social or normative structure; to discuss the various aspects of these positions and determine their philosophical merits and faults
- 3- To promote students' ability to critically analyze these positions, cultural views, the political circumstances surrounding these views, and to defend their own positions in writing
- 4- To critically survey competing claims concerning ethical, political, social, and cultural values associated with historical and contemporary disagreements and accomplishments
