- The following are the most common types of errors that can occur in the use of the chi-square test:
 - Incorrectly identifying the variables: The chi-square test is only applicable to categorical variables. If the variables are not categorical, the test will not be valid.
 - Incorrectly calculating the expected frequencies: The expected frequencies are calculated based on the marginal totals of the contingency table. If these are calculated incorrectly, the chi-square statistic will be incorrect.
 - Incorrectly interpreting the results: The chi-square test only tells you whether there is a significant association between the variables. It does not tell you the strength or direction of the association.

- All major findings must be described in the conclusions section, including the 95% CI for the main effect and any interaction.
