Minority Students in Special and Gifted Education National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Board on Behavioral, Cognitive, and Sensory Sciences, Committee on Minority Representation in Special Education, 2002-08-30 Special education and gifted and talented programs were designed for children whose educational needs are not well met in regular classrooms From their inception these programs have had disproportionate representation of racial and ethnic minority students What causes this disproportion Is it a problem Minority Students in Special and Gifted Education considers possible contributors to that disparity including early biological and environmental influences and inequities in opportunities for preschool and K 12 education as well as the possibilities of bias in the referral and assessment system that leads to placement in special programs It examines the data on early childhood experience on differences in educational opportunity and on referral and placement The book also considers whether disproportionate representation should be considered a problem Do special education programs provide valuable educational services or do they set students off on a path of lower educational expectations Would students not now placed in gifted and talented programs benefit from raised expectations more rigorous classes and the gifted label or would they suffer failure in classes for which they are unprepared By examining this important problem in U S education and making recommendations for early intervention and general education as well as for changes in referral and assessment processes Minority Students in Special and Gifted Education will be an indispensable resource to educators throughout the nation as well as to policy makers at all levels from schools and school districts to the state and federal governments

The Development of a Test of Listening Comprehension for Kindergarten and Beginning First Grade Nancy Kubin Wallner,1971 Impact of Pre-kindergarten Education on Elementary Student Achievement Serena Pierson,2013

The purpose of this study was to determine if pre kindergarten attendance resulted in increased school readiness for kindergarten students and if prekindergarten attendance resulted in higher student achievement for third grade students Specifically the data for this research was drawn from the pre kindergarten program of a mid size district in Houston Texas In terms of methodology quantitative techniques and analysis were used to illustrate data collected from the research sample A two sided t test was run on each group to model the relationship between pre kindergarten attendance and school readiness as determined by TPRI and social screening and the relationship between pre kindergarten attendance and academic success as measured by third grade TAKS Furthermore a multiple linear regression test was performed on each group to asses if gender and ethnicity further impacted the results of school readiness and academic success The findings of this research showed that attending pre kindergarten impacted school readiness in two areas and showed no impact in one area of the TPRI The areas that showed a positive correlation were beginning letter sound identification and listening comprehension The area that revealed no impact was blending onset rhymes and phonemes Another notable finding is that students who had attended pre kindergarten showed no significant edge in socialization as identified by the University of Texas Social Screener Survey As for longer term success pre kindergarten attendance did not have a significant impact on third grade TAKS scores in neither reading nor math
