Archaeology and Bioarchaeology of Population Movement among the Prehispanic Maya Andrea Cucina, 2014-11-17 Archaeological evidence i e the presence of exogenous foreign material objects pottery obsidian and so on is used to make inferences on ancient trade while population movement can only be assessed when the biological component of an ancient community is analyzed i e the human skeletal remains But the exchange of goods or the presence of foreign architectural patterns does not necessarily imply genetic admixture between groups while at the same time humans can migrate for reasons that may not be related only to trading The Prehispanic Maya were a complex highly stratified society During the Classic period city states governed over large regions establishing complex ties of alliance and commerce with the region s minor centers and their allies against other city states within and outside the Maya realm The fall of the political system during the Classic period the Maya collapse led to hypothetical invasions of leading groups from the Gulf of Mexico into the northern Maya lowland at the onset of the Postclassic However it is still unclear whether this collapse was already underway when this movement of people started The whole picture of population dynamics in Maya Prehispanic times during the Classic and the Postclassic can slowly emerge only when all the pieces of the puzzle are put together in a holistic and multidisciplinary fashion The contributions of this volume bring together contributions from archaeology archaeometry paleodemography and bioarchaeology They provide an initial account of the dynamic qualities behind large scale ancient population dynamics and at the same time represent novel multidisciplinary points of departure towards an integrated reconstruction and understanding of Prehispanic population dynamics in the Maya region

Geurds, Laura Van Broekhoven, 2013-11-27 Authenticity and authentication is at the heart of museums concerns in displays objects and interaction with visitors These notions have formed a central element in early thought on culture and collecting Nineteenth century explorers commissioned museum collectors and pioneering ethnographers attempted to lay bare the essences of cultures through collecting and studying objects from distant communities Comparably historical archaeology departed from the idea that cultures were discrete bounded entities subject to divergence but precisely therefore also to be traced back and linked to a more complete original form in the even deeper past Much of what we work with today in ethnographic museum collections testifies to that conviction Post structural thinking brought about a far reaching deconstruction of the authentic It came to be recognized that both far away communities and the deep past can only be discussed when seen as desires constructions and inventions Notwithstanding this undressing of the ways in which people portray their cultural surroundings and past claims of authenticity and quests for authentication remain omnipresent This book explores the authentic in contemporary ethnographic museums as it persists in dialogues with stakeholders and how museums portray themselves How do we interact with questions of authenticity and authentication when we curate study artefacts collect repatriate and make representations The contributing authors illustrate the divergent nature in which the authentic is brought into play deconstructed and operationalized Authenticity the book argues is an expression of a desire that is equally troubled as it is resilient
