

The Trail of Tears

The Cherokees were one of the largest and most important Native American tribes in the United States at the beginning of the eighteenth century. For hundreds of years, they had lived and farmed on land in northern Georgia. Then, in 1830, Congress passed the Indian Removal Act, which gave the U.S. government the right to relocate several Native American tribes—the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles—and give their land to white people. In 1838, President Andrew Jackson ordered the Cherokees to move off their homelands. He wanted to give their land to white settlers because gold had been discovered on it. Jackson sent military troops to gather Cherokee men, women, and children from Georgia and move them to Oklahoma. Although it was a bitterly cold winter, the Cherokees were forced to march over 1,200 miles. More than 4,000 Cherokees died from hardships—hunger, exposure, and disease. It is unfortunate that so many were treated so badly in a country founded on lofty ideals—that all people are created equal and have the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This sad time in history is now called the Trail of Tears—a translation from the Cherokee for the “Trail Where They Cried.”
