

Photosynthesis and Respiration in Elodea

Background Concepts:

Plants can carry out both photosynthesis and respiration simultaneously. During photosynthesis, plants are using the energy of the sun to build molecules which effectively store this energy (glucose). Chemically, the photosynthetic reaction looks like this:

During respiration, plants are using this stored energy (glucose), to fuel their metabolic processes. Chemically, the respiratory process looks like this:

Remember that plants can carry out respiration all the time!

Among other things, the converted energy from respiration is used to synthesize molecules, move materials around within the organism, grow (create new cells) and reproduce. Notice that in photosynthesis, CO<sub>2</sub> (carbon dioxide) is being used up as it is “fixed” into glucose molecules. During respiration the opposite is true. As the plant releases the energy stored in glucose by breaking it down, CO<sub>2</sub> is being given off into the surrounding water or atmosphere. The relationship between these two processes is special in that it allows plants to recycle some of their by-products. (While CO<sub>2</sub> is being given off during respiration, it can be re-utilized during photosynthesis.)

In this lab, you will try to demonstrate the net change in carbon dioxide when the common fresh water plant Elodea is placed under different conditions. You will be using a pH indicator, bromthymol blue, as a means of determining the presence or absence of CO<sub>2</sub>.

A solution of bromthymol blue changes color when CO<sub>2</sub> is introduced. It changes color due to a change in pH. When CO<sub>2</sub> is dissolved in water, it forms carbonic acid. This lowers the pH of the solution and causes the bromthymol blue to change its appearance.
