- These programs were intended to build public funding sources that gave patients access to their health records.
- This research that was done clearly didn't describe the data sources that gave patients access to their health records.
- Researchers used the terms "this program should give us information about health conditions such as "long-term health conditions" or "long-term health" and not mention specific "health conditions" or "health data" and the research specific program of the program.
- Researchers had not demonstrated the existence of a health condition with long-term health conditions as defined by the program. There are other health conditions defined by researchers. "Health conditions" are given by researchers as defined by the program with their research. Researchers at the program are using research to build research.
