

How Social Media Escalates the Discussion

While traditional media sources deliver a large part of all information to the public, they do not foster the same response rate and speed as social media posts. The role of social media websites and applications (Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, Tumblr, and others) can be considered even more influential in promoting “pro-ana” and “pro-mia” (positive depictions of bulimia) tendencies. An analysis of social media posts reveals several characteristics of online ED discussions.

First, some studies show that the portrayal of EDs on social media is glamorized. Achievement of body standards, even those that many users in pro-ED communities establish are extreme, are portrayed as vital for one’s happiness. This representation is not unique; similar depictions are present throughout the mass media within general advertising and the fashion industry. However, the lengths to which the proponents of EDs will go are targeted at creating an exaggerated type of such an ideal.

Social media conversation is different from that of mass media publications and programs because it opens a dialogue between people with similar views and goals. Those who share information about weight loss, especially if it is done through harmful means, are more inclined to believe blogs and individuals rather than more traditional sources, such as women’s magazines (Holmes, 2018). One can also use this finding to discuss the role of mass media in forming and supporting the idea that such publications are bad or untrustworthy.

On the other hand, blog posts discussing similar issues written by people are deemed more realistic and trustworthy in the depiction of EDs. This comparison can be both useful and harmful, depending on the contents of such magazines and blogs.

Returning to the idea that social media offers anyone the opportunity to converse with others, one can show how pro-ED sentiments are spread. A simple search for weight loss, exercise, and dieting can turn into a post about “thinspiration,” and escalate into a variety of pro-ED concepts. Scholars also perceive there to be a connection between EDs and other mental health problems such as depression. Pater, Haimson, Andalibi, and Mynatt (2016) find that the use of hashtags is a link between these issues – a person searching for a particular idea may become connected to other concepts. Thus, the positive portrayal of EDs may start as a subtle comment about one’s appearance, such as general unhappiness with weight or form, but, then, can escalate into a harsher comment about oneself stemming from reading pro-EDs sentiments.

Another difference between the portrayals of EDs in different media sources is the presence of mutual support in social media circles. While publications and programs may portray EDs as dangerous and negative, they cannot actively offer advice to people

With the advent of digital communication platforms, social media has become an integral part of the lives of young individuals, shaping their attitudes, beliefs, and actions. The paper delves into the various ways in which social media trends impact the behavioral dynamics of youth, examining both positive and negative consequences. Various sociological perspectives were applied to analyse the impact of social media trends on the behavioral patterns of youth, including functionalism, conflict theory, and symbolic interactionism. The rise of social media has revolutionized the way individuals communicate and interact. Today's youth are the primary users of these platforms, making it imperative to understand the impact of social media trends on their behavioural patterns. The consistent exposure to a wide range of content, like influencers, memes, and viral challenges, has a prospective impact on the youth's behavior and decision-making processes. Getting to comprehend the association of these social media trends and the behavior of the youth is very vital for mental health professionals, educators, policymakers, and parents to ensure the well-being and development of the younger generation. Nowadays, younger generations grow up having good contact with different types of social networks, easily acquire digital culture, and live in a digital world where only adults are naturalized citizens. Social networking in recent times is popular among young people, particularly university students. According to Rida Noor (2000), the term social media refers to a group of applications like Facebook, Twitter, WhatsApp, Messenger, Instagram, and YouTube. Due to the rapid growth of internet usage around the world, there are many youths deserting from electronic media, specifically those who watch and listen to television and radio respectively, to social media. Social media has brought both positive and negative effects on the youth.

MEDIA, CULTURE AND SOCIETY: INTER-RELATION AND EVOLUTION Arindam, Saikat Majumdar, Souvik Sur, 2024-09-20 Peace Journalism. Impact of social media on the field of research on peace journalism Isabel Thoma, 2022-10-14 Master's Thesis from the year 2022 in the subject Communications Journalism Journalism Professions grade 7.5 Maastricht University FASOS language English abstract The results of the present work seek to clarify the question in what ways does the phenomenon of social media change how we have defined, explored, and implemented peace journalism thus far. For only when it is apparent how seriously this new reality affects the concept of peace journalism and its practical implementation will the need for further research also become clear. Peace journalism plays a role and has the potential to sensitize people to conflicts, to have a de-escalating effect, and thus ultimately to promote peace. The ideas behind the concept of peace journalism gained importance primarily through the articles of Johann Galtung in the 1960s. Initially formulated as a theory, the ideas found increased application in practice in the 1990s and were implemented by journalists and is nowadays a firmly established if not uncontroversial subfield in journalism. Despite its potential, peace journalism is not a miracle cure. The concept has its limits of effectiveness and applicability and misapplied may do more harm than good. Peace journalism has an impact on the readership and is no less popular than so-called war journalism but it reaches people especially if they are not hardliners who have already established a war frame of the situation. Peace journalism will therefore never be able to transform an entire society but can make a start with certain people at certain times from where the idea can spread and possibly become established and have long-term effects. However, it is noticeable that the idea of peace journalism as currently formulated is becoming increasingly irrelevant in practice due to the changing media landscape, namely the technologies of social media. Research that aims to advance peace journalism must therefore first and foremost examine social media, their modes of action, their functions, their respective audiences, their potential and their dangers.
