

Welcome Speech by Dr. Michael Garrett (Director JIVE)

Joint Institute for VLBI in Europe (JIVE),
Dwingeloo, the Netherlands.

www.jive.nl

7 July 2005.

It is my great pleasure, as the director of JIVE to host this event and to welcome you all to Dwingeloo. In particular, I would especially like to thank Commissioner Potočník and Minister van der Hoeven for being present here today; it is a great honour for JIVE and I believe it reflects the importance that they each attach to the development of large-scale research infrastructures in astronomy, on both a national and international scale. It is also a pleasure to welcome Robert Jan Smits and his team from the European Commission. Most of all I would like to thank all the journalists who have made the long trip to be with us here today – the number of foreign and national press now present in this building is a sure measure of the high interest the European public attach to astronomy – in its scientific, cultural and technological dimensions.

I'd like to begin by giving a brief introduction to JIVE and describe what it is that we do here. The mission of JIVE is to support the European VLBI Network (EVN) in the broadest possible sense. This is a considerable challenge; the EVN consists of 14 institutes operating 16 of the largest radio telescopes in the world, located across Europe and beyond, including China, South Africa and Puerto Rico, USA. In addition, we regularly co-observe with the MERLIN array in the UK and the Very Long Baseline Array in the USA. The EVN operates an "open-skies" policy - astronomers from around the world obtain observing time via a peer-review process in which resources are allocated purely on the basis of scientific merit. Our main task at JIVE is to operate and develop the EVN Data Processor at JIVE in order to generate and deliver VLBI data, not only to astronomers located here in Europe, but to the international astronomical community at large. We also provide feedback to the telescopes on the performance of their systems and take care that any astronomer who may be unfamiliar with the VLBI technique obtains a comprehensive level of support at all stages of their project. As you have seen this morning, during the e-VLBI launch, the development of new state-of-the-art technologies, software applications and advanced concepts for VLBI is also part-and-parcel of what goes on here.
