

Diffusion and Osmosis is the movement of molecules from an area of high concentration to an area of low concentration. This happens mostly without any use of energy so is called passive transport. Sometimes the molecules may be pumped from a low to a high concentration (like going uphill), so energy is needed. This is Active transport.

Diffusion mostly refers to the movement of gases and osmosis used to refer to the movement of water across membranes.

Below are STARR Questions from the previous STARR tests.

☐ D Passive transport

☐ E Transport of glucose and energy conversion

☐ F Movement of glucose and water out ☐ G Cell membranes perform all the following

How would this organism be able to survive in a dry environment?

☐ A The concentration of water in the environment would be higher than the cell.

☐ B The concentration of water in the environment would be higher than the concentration of the organism.

☐ C The concentration of water inside the cell is higher than the concentration outside the cell.

☐ D The organism could move out of the environment to a dry environment.
