

Misunderstanding Racial Identity

8 pages | 1783 words

The wrong interpretation of race has actually caused racism and bias issues, which have actually been passed from generation to generation. In America, where there is a big variety, more people are guilty of "classifying" others by utilizing race and stereotypes. The incorrect "sorting" of people has ended up being more obvious on T. V, day-to-day life, and current political and public views. In this text, I will check out some of the ways in which popular culture adds to the hazardous pattern of perpetuating and promoting unjust classifications through the use of stereotypes. Today, we recognize individuals in such a way that people's feelings are affected. Media has an enormous effect on this because that is how individuals keep up-to-date with pop culture. Also agreeing with my perspective is Omi, who mentions that "Popular culture has been an essential realm within which racial ideologies [that] provide a framework of symbols, principles, and images through which we understand, analyze, and represent aspects of our "racial existence" (Pg. 628). The manner in which media present individuals from different cultures influences the method we develop prejudices. By looking at these features, we come up with ideas (or stereotypes) about the people that are existing. I consider myself as an individual that gets categorized by other individuals and likewise take part in categorizing due to the fact that I resemble any other human being that criticizes individuals's actions, appearance, the method they speak, and so on. While judging others, we come up with assumptions about them and categorize them into a group or category. Based upon the image that we form, we construct their identity in our minds and consequently deal with individuals based on that image we have created of them. The classification of people into groups is so grave that global issues have occurred and are likely to keep occurring. For example, consider slavery; Europeans made a hierarchy of races putting African Americans at the bottom of the list. If we recall, African Americans became slaves in the United States and were treated with cruelty because they were seen as the lowest class that had no rights. Since a large portion of Americans viewed African American as the lowest class, the belief has remained throughout generations, therefore; many Americans still classify African Americans as the lowest class. Many times advertisement is a way in which specific groups are targeted and this can be offensive to the group because the commercials, ads, or posters present stereotypes instead. Propaganda and advertisement are meant to appeal to the attention of certain groups, but when the groups are racially targeted, it is a problem that we should strive to resolve to better our communities. Other situations where stereotypes are observable are when we watch Television. For example, when a Hispanic family is presented along with violence and maltreatment, the stereotype of "macho" and violent men is spread throughout society. As a result of such events portrayed by the media, we form perceptions about people or groups, and in our minds generalize the situations by applying it to a whole race. Stereotypes are not limited to...
