

losses of knowledge — this book does exactly what an intermediary text should do! Reading this, my interest rose, as I am always on the lookout for intermediary material for students which is readable, comprehensive and concise, compares ideas, situates them in context and includes critique. A big ask, my night owl, but not impossible.

This book compares two parts with numerous chapters within each. Part 1 is entitled 'Theories in Marriage and Family Therapy' and includes the obligatory history, systems theory and epistemology chapters and various chapters are different schools of family therapy. Part 2 looks at special issues in marriage (and family therapy). This section covers a range of subjects and includes chapters on marriage enrichment and premarital counselling, sexual dysfunction and new therapy, gender, culture and spirituality and ethical, legal and professional issues.

Each chapter is written by a different author who has obviously followed a template, a nice idea given there are 20 authors involved. However, despite this, quality varies substantially, with some chapters providing material which is clear, succinct and comprehensive, and others providing good examples of how not to write. With so many authors involved, this book does not develop the sense of flow and comparative analysis that emerges in text written by one or two authors.

The book is clearly aimed at the US market; for example, the editors provide a list of US graduate programs in family and marriage therapy and include the AAMFT Code of Ethics; authors use US-specific examples. Although this may make the text valuable for students in the United States, it's a distraction for overseas readers. Moreover, the history chapter makes hardly a nod to influences outside US borders. Having said this, I should note there are inconsistent attempts to include international material (e.g. in a list of family therapy journals, the JGQVF gets a mention but the JFT does not) and the description of narrative therapy and its growth is definitely international. The fact that Michael B. White has a strong focus on couple therapy as well as family therapy will be attractive to some readers. In addition, the chapters are legal, ethical and professional issues areas are important and often are highlighted in other texts.

To be a useful intermediary text, it has to cover the basic stuff. Compared to chapters on the history of family therapy, psychiatric schools and family therapy research with Carr (2000) and Nichols and Schwartz (2004), using the criteria mentioned in the opening paragraph. The history and schools chapters in both Carr and Nichols and Schwartz miss the criteria whereas those in this book not less. For example, concepts were not stressed in the evolutionary history of family therapy and there was no comparative analysis or critique and, in the history chapter, there was unnecessary material left out. However, the research chapter in this book is well written and comprehensive, highlighting differences, examining alternative methodologies and reporting the current status of research. It compared favourably to that in Nichols and Schwartz and was far more comprehensive than that in Carr. Such a comparison is a rough read not least one, nevertheless, which doesn't encourage me to substitute this book for other texts already on my shelf.

Experiential Psychotherapy with Couples — A Guide for the Creative Pragmatist.

Rob Fisher, Phoenix, AZ, Zeng, Rachel & Thurner, 2003.

Apogee, pp. 262 (2003) £40/£44.95 h.
(96 pages) ISBN 044 35.

In September last year the 21th Australian Family Therapy Conference in Brisbane had as its theme 'Coming to Together: Family Therapy Practice for the Future'. The main aim of the conference was to make a contribution towards integration by bringing together the fields theoretical and practice traditions. Rob Fisher's new Experiential Psychotherapy with Couples is more than a guide for the creative pragmatist — it is a guide for the integrated (and I use that word deliberately) creative pragmatist. Whilst being strongly grounded in the present (experiential and systemic) frame of therapy this very practice-focused guide also privileges the therapeutic relationship and what Thurner here (2000) has called the 'joint moment' in psychotherapy.

In my view, Fisher writes clearly yet eloquently about how to facilitate therapy sessions so that couples experience a significant and transformative moment in the present moment of therapy — an experiential moment that can act as a reference point for ongoing change/development in the relationship. Fisher articulates his approach in a very 'how to' and user-friendly format. It is based with examples and supports of couple therapy exercises. His work is underpinned by principles of neuroscience and mindfulness to challenge both therapist and client to achieve and work in a reflective and sufficient space. This space involves working at a different level and pace than that required by ordinary conversational consciousness in problem solving.

Nichols (1987) writes about the dilemma of how to pay attention not only to the relationship and wider systems, but also to the individual when working with relationships. Fisher provides a way of achieving balance in terms of honouring the individual and interpersonal aspects of couple experience. Another implication that Fisher's approach achieves is new human experience and meaning making. In this way Fisher is able to incorporate postmodern influences and have them on alongside his psychoanalytic relationship concepts.

In the approach advocated in this text, Fisher sees the role of the couple therapist as a 'catalyst' to the unfolding of self and experience in the moment by managing consciousness, tracking and resonating experience and the information that it provides. He is careful in his approach to move the learning from client experience rather than attempting to achieve a creative experience from cathartic work. The book clearly sets out the principles and underlying philosophies that underpin the experiential approach and then describes the means and means processes involved in experiential couple work. Fisher and his approach to couples counselling challenges the couple therapist to be able to:

- 'work with a self focus' (active rather than go along)
- engage with all their humanity
- have a high tolerance for uncertainty
- give up on the notion of client resistance
- be able to hold many (and one) point of view simultaneously
- adjust their use of self to the needs of clients
- be active and not violent

Tank Waste Retrieval, Processing, and On-site Disposal at Three Department of Energy Sites National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Nuclear and Radiation Studies Board, Committee on the Management of Certain Radioactive Waste Streams Stored in Tanks at Three Department of Energy Sites, 2006-10-12. DOE Tank Waste: How clean is clean enough? The U.S. Congress asked the National Academies to evaluate the Department of Energy's DOE's plans for cleaning up defense related radioactive wastes stored in underground tanks at three sites: the Hanford Site in Washington State, the Savannah River Site in South Carolina, and the Idaho National Laboratory. DOE plans to remove the waste from the tanks, separate out high level radioactive waste to be shipped to an off site geological repository and dispose of the remaining lower activity waste on site. The report concludes that DOE's overall plan is workable but some important challenges must be overcome including the removal of residual waste from some tanks especially at Hanford and Savannah River. The report recommends that DOE pursue a more risk informed consistent participatory and transparent for making decisions about how much waste to retrieve from tanks and how much to dispose of on site. The report offers several other detailed recommendations to improve the technical soundness of DOE's tank cleanup plans.

Charter Schools Jack Buckley, Mark Schneider, 2009-07-13 Over the past several years privately run publicly funded charter schools have been sold to the American public as an education alternative promising better student achievement greater parent satisfaction and more vibrant school communities But are charter schools delivering on their promise Or are they just hype as critics contend a costly experiment that is bleeding tax dollars from public schools In this book Jack Buckley and Mark Schneider tackle these questions about one of the thorniest policy reforms in the nation today Using an exceptionally rigorous research approach the authors investigate charter schools in Washington D C carefully examining school data going back more than a decade interpreting scores of interviews with parents students and teachers and meticulously measuring how charter schools perform compared to traditional public schools Their conclusions are sobering Buckley and Schneider show that charter school students are not outperforming students in traditional public schools that the quality of charter school education varies widely from school to school and that parent enthusiasm for charter schools starts out strong but fades over time And they argue that while charter schools may meet the most basic test of sound public policy they do no harm the evidence suggests they all too often fall short of advocates claims With the future of charter schools and perhaps public education as a whole hanging in the balance this book supports the case for holding charter schools more accountable and brings us considerably nearer to resolving this contentious debate
