

Building Paper Airplanes

Life Skills:

- Thinking & Reasoning
- Communication
- Employability

Time Frame:

1 class period that runs 40 minutes.

Group Size:

Large Groups

Summary:

Can you build a better (paper) airplane than your neighbor? Only the best will be chosen to go into production. We'll even try mass producing the best airplane.

Materials:

Teacher - at least 50 sheets of 8 1/2 x 11 inch type paper. Students, each will need one sheet of 8 1/2 x 11 inch type paper.

Background For Teachers:

All students will be asked to fold the best paper airplane they can fold. It isn't necessary that all students have previous experience. Not knowing how to do this exercise can lead to other discussions on employability.

Intended Learning Outcomes:

Students will make observations, collect and record data. Students will experience how competition affects a product and its productivity. Students will estimate the price of a product and figure the profit. This estimation will be done for individually and mass produced items.

Instructional Procedures:

The teacher could have a paper airplane already folded and ready to fly. Start the lesson by flying the airplane to the back of the room. As it lands, tell the students that only one student will be selected to produce the 'best' or farthest flying airplane. Pass out paper to each student and instruct them to fold the best possible paper airplane. Their goal is to create a plane that will fly the greatest distance. The winner will be chosen to 'build' teacher plane for this project. Run flight tests on all paper airplanes. Select the one that flies the farthest. You may need to run different heats. You may want to conduct the flight tests outside or in a large enclosed area such as a gym or lunch room. The winner will then fold as many airplanes (using the same design) as possible in 2 1/2 minutes (or more if you desire). Assign a price to produce each airplane and what it could sell for. For example: Labor - 6 per hour or 0.25 per 2 1/2 minutes, cost of materials - 2 cents each. Selling price - 1 each. You may assign any price you desire for students to do some mental math. Have students figure the profit per plane. Record the data on the board. Students could also record the data. Discuss with the students what would happen if the student building the planes could make more in the same amount of time. Could more money be made? How would they do that? After the discussion, have another student come up and help the 'winner' fold airplanes. Go through the same procedures in timing the students and in figuring profit (only now there are two employees). Discuss the possibilities of increasing production. Have four or more students come to the front of the room (this number depends on the steps needed for assembly). The 'winner' will set up an assembly line where each worker completes his/her folds. Again, time the students for 2 1/2 or 3 minutes. Complete the process for figuring profit, allowing for more labor costs. Also discuss how the students would like to work on an assembly line for 8 hours a day.
