Answers to Questions

- 4-1. A firm's products and services define its customers, as well as its competitors. New products and services often involve new markets and require new processes. The design process is the most obvious driver of change in an organization. It capitalizes on a firm's core competencies and determines what new competencies need to be developed. Organizations can gain a competitive edge through designs that (1) bring ideas to the market quickly, (2) do a better job of satisfying customer needs, and (3) are easier to manufacture, use, and repair than existing products.
- 4-2. Quality of design—size; location and amount of lighting; size of blackboards; heat; presentation equipment; Quality of conformance—no. of students crowded into room; overhead projector or lights don't work, too hot or too cold; instructor doesn't speak loud enough or students are too loud.
