

Scope Marketing as a Value Building Process

1. What is Marketing?

Marketing is defined by the American Marketing Association as the activity, set of institutions, and processes for creating, communicating, delivering, and exchanging offerings that have value for customers, clients, partners, and society at large.

What are some key words to highlight in this definition?

First, marketing is a process – it means it is a way to organize information, create intelligence from this information, and devise a specific course of action based on this intelligence.

Second, the goal of marketing is to communicate, deliver and exchange offerings that have value to customer. This term of value is probably the most important in any marketing-related definition.

Finally, the definition emphasizes that value should be created not only for customers, but for all stakeholders, and for society at large (i.e., a value ecosystem). This is important as good marketing entails a long-term view of business, and a sustainable or viable strategy on the long-term.

If marketing is a process, what is this process?

It involves the following steps, with the overall objective to deliver and capture value for all stakeholders.
