

Information Explanations: What are they and how to use them

Definitions

Information: facts and figures about something

Explanation: giving reasons for something or someone's actions.

Information explanations: give reasons for something using facts.

These explanations make responses that are based on facts. They are often used in science, history and geography. They are also used in English, mathematics, computing, art, design technology, music, P.E., French, German, Spanish, Italian, etc. They are used to explain what has happened, why it has happened, what caused it to happen, what will happen next, what might have caused it to happen, etc.

For example, when we learn about the water cycle, we learn about precipitation, evaporation, condensation, infiltration, runoff, etc.

When we learn about the English language, we learn about grammar, punctuation, spelling, etc.

When we learn about the human body, we learn about the heart, lungs, brain, etc.

Information explanations

These are very common explanations because it is easier to give reasons for something than to say what has happened without giving reasons.

For example, if I say "I am going to the shop", I am giving an information explanation.

Reasons

These are explanations that give reasons for something happening. They are often used in science, history and geography. They are also used in English, mathematics, computing, art, design technology, music, P.E., French, German, Spanish, Italian, etc.

For example, when we learn about the water cycle, we learn about precipitation, evaporation, condensation, infiltration, runoff, etc.
