

Chapter 2: Mapping Our World

2.1 Objectives

- Describe the difference between latitude and longitude.
- Explain why it is important to give a city's complete coordinates when describing its location.
- Explain why there are different time zones from one geographic area to the next

Latitude and Longitude

Lines of latitude and longitude are used to locate places on Earth.

Latitude

Maps are flat models of three-dimensional objects. For thousands of years people have used maps to define borders and to find places. The map at the beginning of this chapter was made in 1570 by Abraham Ortelius.

What do you notice about the size and shape of the continents? Today, more information is available to create more accurate maps. The science of mapmaking is called cartography.

Cartographers use an imaginary grid of parallel lines to locate exact points on Earth. In this grid, the equator horizontally circles Earth halfway between the north and south poles. The equator separates Earth into two equal halves called the northern hemisphere and the southern hemisphere.

The Origins of Grammar Kathy Hirsh-Pasek, Roberta M. Golinkoff, 1996 How do children achieve adult grammatical competence How do they induce syntactical rules from the bewildering linguistic input that surrounds them The major debates in language acquisition theory today focus not on whether there are some sensitivities to syntactic information but rather which sensitivities are available to children and how they might be translated into the organizing principles that get syntactic learning off the ground The Origins of Grammar presents a synthesis of work done by the authors who have pioneered one of the most important methodological advances in language learning in the past decade the intermodal preferential looking paradigm which can be used to assess lexical and syntactic knowledge in children as young as 13 months In addition to drawing together their groundbreaking empirical work the authors use these results to describe a theory of language learning that emphasizes the role of multiple cues and forces in development They show how infants shift their reliance on different aspects of the linguistic input moving from a bias to attend to prosodic information to a reliance on semantic information and finally to a reliance on the syntax itself Viewing language acquisition as the product of a biased learner who takes advantage of the information available from a variety of sources in his or her environment The Origins of Grammar provides a new way of thinking about the process of language comprehension The analysis borrows insights from theories about the development of mental models models of early cognitive development and systems theory and is presented in a way that will be accessible to cognitive and developmental psychologists Seeking New Horizons Henry W. Castner,1990 Geography is often introduced to schoolchildren by having them look at maps as formal conventional objects rather than as tools for analysing and communicating ideas about geographic relationships But how effective is this Recent research in cartographic communication and map perception suggests that geographic literacy is generally quite low In Seeking New Horizons Henry Castner proposes another approach our focus should shift from maps to the ways in which geographic information and the relationships within it can be isolated and communicated graphically With the adoption of a perspective which focuses on the user children would be encouraged to discover the concepts underlying geographic thinking in its most elemental and natural forms Planning Powerful
