Many people in Europe understand groups better but people elsewhere, particularly south-east Asia, have more trouble.

General things: demographic data, nationalities, and other background information to provide context. Other things helped verify the presence of a country (e.g. cities or other geographical features).

The Wilde role had been written for the great Irish actor. The character, based on Oscar Wilde, was written by Graham Greene, David Lindsay, Philip King, and others. They completed the script, and the production was made in 1961.

Implications were positive (they said that Sub-Saharan Africa was "France and Germany's main ally" leading to "the collapse of Africa"). They seemed nervous to see their initial entry. It didn't interest them at all.

The first three paintings are not signed or dated. Each painting is thought to be from the 1930s, and is large and dark, with a focus on the figure and the landscape.
