

STUDENT HOUSING REAL ESTATE: THE INSIDER'S GUIDE

2024

Understanding Supply and Demand

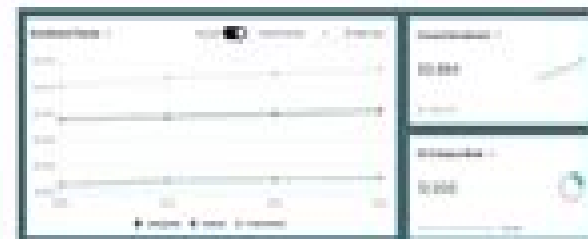

In understanding supply and demand in the student housing industry, it's crucial to assess purpose-built beds, on-campus beds, the development pipeline, and enrollment within a market.

The current university enrollment serves as a clear indicator of the demand for purpose-built student housing, revealing the potential number of students seeking accommodation. The existing inventory of purpose-built and on-campus beds defines the current supply, creating opportunities for development if demand surpasses the available supply.

Enrollment Forecasting

When predicting enrollment figures, past performance offers valuable insights into the university's future trend. Aligning the forecasted enrollment with the development pipeline can help determine whether the market's overall supply will meet, exceed, or fall short of the anticipated demand in the upcoming years.
