Student Exploration: Air Track

Background: An air track is a device consisting of a long, narrow tube with many small holes along its length. Air is pumped into the tube, creating a thin layer of air that the glider sits on. This reduces friction, allowing the glider to move with very little resistance.

Before class: Read the background information and think about the questions below. Write your answers on a separate sheet of paper.

1. Why is an air track a good model for studying motion? Because it has a very low friction and is straight.
2. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.
3. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.

Classroom activity: Set up the air track and use the gliders to study motion. Record your observations and answers to the questions below.

4. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.
5. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.
6. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.
7. What do you think would happen if a glider was pushed to the right and then released? It would move to the right and then stop.
