Shading concepts of the K, R, and FK Variety

The numbers refer to the type of response indicated in the text.

back of the man and the subject attributes this to the difference in shading of the blue areas.)

Card I: 1D—this is the lower part of a girl's body, she is wearing a thin dress and you can see the shape of her body below the hips. Scored: D FK +. (Traditionally this would be considered a surface texture response of the transparency variety, but inquiry reveals that there is an element of distance between the skirt of the dress and the body within it, therefore an FK is justified.)

Shading as Diffusion

When shading is used to introduce the impression of diffusion or expansiveness into the concept the symbol is K or KF. The former symbolizes the absence of blue content in the concept while the latter utilizes the form of the blue with its concomitant level of accuracy. Essentially the K determinant is space occupying but in a nebulous intangible manner that reflects the rationale of the personality dynamics which imposes this quality on the blue stimulus. The K determinant is usually applicable to cloud, smoke, fog, and light concepts such as those in Figure 12.

Card VII: 2—clouds, the whole (Fig. 1.1. heavy clouds. Scored: W K.

1—these 1.1. cumulus clouds. Scored: W KF. (Both shading and form used.)

Card II: 2—a forest fire with smoke choking out the flames. Scored: W C, K. (Smoke is scored as an additional determinant in this particular response, and requires K.)

Card IX: 2—1.1. the cotton candy you buy at the circus, you know, the pink kind. Scored: D CF, KF.

Card VI: 2—I see a lighthouse tower with the light on, those (upper wing detail) are the rays from the powerful lantern. Scored: W KF, F +.

1D—a novel post, it's so highly polished that there is a light reflection on it here. Scored: D K, F +.
