

Unit 7: Natural Selection

Introduction to Natural Selection It focuses on the core principles of evolution, with natural selection as the primary mechanism driving changes in populations over time. It begins with an understanding of how inherited traits that enhance survival and reproduction become more common in a population, while less favorable traits diminish. The unit explores how human intervention can also drive evolutionary change through artificial selection. Key concepts like genetic variation, gene flow, genetic drift, and mutations are examined within the framework of population genetics. Students learn how to use the Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium to predict and analyze genetic stability and change. The unit also highlights a wide range of evidence supporting evolution, from fossil records and anatomical similarities to molecular and genetic data, all pointing to a shared ancestry among species. It examines how populations continue to evolve in response to environmental pressures, how new species arise through speciation, and how evolutionary relationships are mapped through phylogenetic trees. The concepts of extinction and biodiversity are addressed, emphasizing how extinction shapes the evolutionary landscape. Lastly, the unit investigates the origins of life on Earth and how early conditions gave rise to the first living organisms. Together, these topics provide a comprehensive understanding of how evolution unifies the biological sciences and explains the diversity of life.

Charles,James D. Slotta,Nathaniel Lasry,2019-07-11 This book represents the emerging efforts of a growing international network of researchers and practitioners to promote the development and uptake of evidence based pedagogies in higher education at something a level approaching large scale impact By offering a communication venue that attracts and enhances much needed partnerships among practitioners and researchers in pedagogical innovation we aim to change the conversation and focus on how we work and learn together i e extending the implementation and knowledge of co design methods In this first edition of our Research Topic on Active Learning we highlight two of the three types of publications we wish to promote First are studies aimed at understanding the pedagogical designs developed by practitioners in their own practices by bringing to bear the theoretical lenses developed and tested in the education research community These types of studies constitute the practice pull that we see as a necessary counterbalance to knowledge push in a more productive pedagogical innovation ecosystem based on research practitioner partnerships Second are studies empirically examining the implementations of evidence based designs in naturalistic settings and under naturalistic conditions Interestingly the teams conducting these studies are already exemplars of partnerships between researchers and practitioners who are uniquely positioned as in between straddling the two worlds As a result these publications represent both the rigours of research and the pragmatism of reflective practice In forthcoming editions we will add to this collection a third type of publication design profiles These will present practitioner developed pedagogical designs at varying levels of abstraction to be held to scrutiny amongst practitioners instructional designers and researchers alike We hope by bringing these types of studies together in an open access format that we may contribute to the development of new forms of practitioner researcher interactions that promote co design in pedagogical innovation
