Introduction

The nuclear family has been considered a necessary feature of society for an extended period. People assumed having a complete family to provide sufficient care and support for their children. Indeed, there is an opinion that the notion of a typical family is fading away (Luscombe, 2014). It is assumed that the two-parent model is the best way for children to feel safe and provide them with a pension (Luscombe, 2014). Moreover, many people have negative stereotypes about divorced or single parents with children. It might provide a child with the required resources for living, but nowadays, many mothers go to work on maternity leave to avoid being dependent on the father's earnings. Additionally, many forms of families
