

Diabetes Case Studies

Case Study 1

Sallie Smith, 42 years of age, is newly diagnosed with type 2 diabetes. During the patient education, the patient asks the nurse, "What should I do if I am sick and can't eat; should I still take my medicine for the diabetes?"

1. What management strategies should the nurse provide the patient to deal with "sick days?"

The nurse should provide the patient with a strategy to continue to monitor blood sugar levels, take medications as prescribed, eat small amounts of food that are easy to digest, and stay hydrated.

Case Study 2

Jerry Thomas is a 26-year-old type 1 diabetic. He was originally diagnosed at the age of 14, and currently manages his disease with an intensive regimen of insulin injections. Jerry is employed as a schoolteacher and soccer coach. He presents today with a 2-day history of vomiting and diarrhea. He has been closely monitoring his blood glucoses, and is using regular insulin for high blood glucose levels. He has only been able to tolerate liquids such as Gatorade, but today he is unable to even tolerate that, and comes to the clinic for evaluation of possible diabetic ketoacidosis (DKA).

1. Describe the pathophysiology of DKA and why it occurs in patients with type 1 diabetes.

Diabetic ketoacidosis is a serious complication of diabetes that takes place when the body produces large amounts of blood acids called ketones. Ketones are the product of protein breakdown in the cells when the body can not produce insulin naturally. Patients with type 1 diabetes can not produce insulin and, therefore are at a greater risk of DKA if diabetes is not controlled with glucose.

2. Based on the diagnosis of DKA, what assessment findings does the nurse correlate to this disorder?

Polydipsia, polyuria, ketones in urine, weakness, n/v, abdominal pain, hyperglycemia, fruity breath
