

Nutrient Requirements of Fish and Shrimp

The continued growth of the aquatic farming industry depends on the development of nutritious feeds that maximize fish growth and health while minimizing the environmental impacts caused by uneaten feed and animal waste—a challenge that can only be met with updated information on the nutritional requirements of fish and shrimp. This report, the latest in a series of National Research Council reports on the nutritional needs of fish, evaluates the most recent scientific literature on the nutrient requirements of several commercially important species of fish and shrimp. The report also reviews the role of aquaculture feeds in determining the nutritional value of seafood to humans, and identifies critical research needs for better defining fish and shrimp nutrient requirements.

In recent years, the aquaculture industry has grown rapidly to become an internationally important source of food and income. In fact, aquaculture—the farming of fish and shellfish for food—now supplies approximately 50 percent by weight of all the fish and shellfish consumed worldwide. With demand for seafood increasing, the aquaculture industry is predicted to continue to grow in coming years.

Nutrition plays a key role in the aquaculture industry by influencing the growth and health of fish, the quality of the seafood produced, and, because uneaten feed and animal waste can add nutrients to the water, the environmental impacts of aquaculture operations. In addition, feed accounts for a significant portion of the costs of an aquaculture enterprise, and therefore nutrition also influences the economic returns of the industry. The development of cost-effective feeds that provide balanced nutrition to maximize growth, while minimizing environmental effects, depends on knowing the species' nutritional requirements—and meeting those requirements with diet formulations and appropriate feeding practices.

The National Research Council has published a series of reports on the nutrition and feeding of fish. Since the release of the last report in 1993, a wealth of new information on fish and shrimp nutrition has become available. In addition to the updated fish and shrimp nutrient requirements, the report also considers strategies to increase nutrient retention and thus reduce environmental pollution, discusses the benefits and detriments of including marine products in fish feeds, and considers the role of feeds in determining the nutritional value of fish for humans.

Fish Nutrition and Feeding

Based on recent scientific literature on the nutrient requirements of fish and shrimp at all stages of life, the report provides an extensive discussion of each of the nutrient classes, including proteins, lipids, carbohydrates, vitamins, and minerals and a review of experiments to determine nutrient requirements. This material forms the basis for updated values for the daily requirement intakes of essential nutrients such as lipids, amino acids, minerals, and vitamins. The values given are the minimum dietary concentrations required to
