Coagulation Pathways- Clot Formation

- Trigger
- Intravascular - trauma
- Hemostasis
- Virchow's Triad
 - venous stasis
 - Hyper-coagulability
 - Endothelial damage

There are things that trigger these pathways to start working (or clotting)

- Intravascular - is inside the vessel and it means the inside of the vessel has a rough surface that tears open cells. The most common cause of this is ASHD (atherosclerotic heart disease), usually caused by high cholesterol and or smoking.
- Extravascular is trauma to the vessel- like when you cut yourself (trigger the cascade)
- Hemostasis - is what your body attempt to do to stop the bleeding. This includes vessel constriction, the platelets plugging together and fibrin making clot
- Virchow's triad is a group of three items that make your patients more susceptible to forming a clot. Those three things are venous stasis (sluggish moving body), hypercoagulability (usually genetic trait that makes a person more prone to clots), and endothelial damage - that tearing of the inner layer of the vessel,. How many of your patients would match these?

Coagulation Cascade and action of anti platelet Drugs

- Again you do not need to this cascade by heart - it is here to show you that different medications affect different parts of the cascade

Factors Linked to Increased Risk of Thromboembolic Event

- Decreased Circulation: older people, varicose veins, thick blood
- Reduced Mobility; bed rest, less mobility
- Disease or Disability; could cause thicker blood
- Obesity; less active less movement
- Obstruction of venous flow
- Medications
 - A thromboembolic event means that a blood clot has formed and then embolized or moved from where it started to another area and causes damage
