States has poured over a billion dollars into a network of interagency intelligence centers called fusion centers These centers were ostensibly set up to prevent terrorism but politicians the press and policy advocates have criticized them for failing on this account So why do these security systems persist Pacifying the Homeland travels inside the secret world of intelligence fusion looks beyond the apparent failure of fusion centers and reveals a broader shift away from mass incarceration and toward a more surveillance and police intensive system of social regulation Provided with unprecedented access to domestic intelligence centers Brendan McQuade uncovers how the institutionalization of intelligence fusion enables decarceration without fully addressing the underlying social problems at the root of mass incarceration The result is a startling analysis that contributes to the debates on surveillance mass incarceration and policing and challenges readers to see surveillance policing mass incarceration and the security state in an entirely new light The Dark Corners of the Lindbergh Kidnapping information here not found anywhere else This volume is slightly different though with much attention given to what I descriptive analysis of how American Indian policies are made both at the statewide and at agency levels Pertinent to all states the study describes New York s historic policies and emphasizes that improving Indian lifestyles or attracting Indians to government employment is handicapped by their overall distrust of state intentions a distrust caused by the continued impasse on American Indian land claims Employing archival records never before used as well as a plethora of interviews with state officials and American Indians over a fifteen year period Hauptman concludes that critical policy changes are
