The Healing Power of Turmeric Dueep Jyot Singh, John Davidson, 2016-06-02 Table of Contents Introduction Turmeric for Healing Cultivation of Turmeric Harvesting Time Turmeric Diseases Storing Fresh Turmeric Turmeric for Beauty Conclusion The Danger of Online Incomplete Knowledge regarding the Usage of Natural Medicine including Turmeric Author Bio Publisher Introduction In my previous books where I have written extensively about herbs especially when they are used for healing in cuisine and for beauty I have normally spoken about herbs which are found globally However thanks to the state of the art transport system of the 21st century I can talk about herbs which were once unavailable to the common people in other lands and native to only just one particular part of the globe And that is the reason why the healing qualities of many local and native herbs like ginseng lemongrass and other such herbs which were possibly not available to people in other corners of the earth were overlooked for centuries But that is definitely not the situation today You can walk into any city market and request spices from all corners of the world and you just have to ask and you will be given And that is why today we are going to be talking about one of the most powerful healing herbs available in the world today to mankind turmeric Turmeric belongs to the ginger family and it is a rhizome It originated in the southwest part of the Indian subcontinent millenniums ago and nobody really knows which particular civilization found out that this rhizome dug up from the ground could be used fresh to impart a golden color to anything food clothes and skin Being a native of a tropical region turmeric needs lots of rain The average temperature outside has to be around 20 C 30 C for this particular plant to survive When I was a child I often saw one of our gardeners who also was a native herbalist going out into the woods and coming back triumphantly with these dug up rhizomes in her hand They looked like ordinary ginger to me So that is when I found out that these rhizomes were boiled for about 45 minutes and then allowed to dry in the sun in the shade for about 3 4 days And after that the dried rhizomes would be ground in a pestle and mortar to give a deep natural yellow orange powder which was precious turmeric
