Why focus on being more rather than just different? Our customers will grow up with more, usually, rather than just different, products. The idea, however, is not to grow up in a product, as you would with a child. We want to grow up with our customers. It just feels like a natural and healthy way to manage global expansion with respect to its long-term viability. I agree that such a strategy has caused the problems we face, and I agree that growth in international and foreign sales taking place outside the United States is a key to our success.
