

The Tribunal observed that under Indian transfer pricing rules, the PSM is applicable mainly in international transactions:

- (a) involving transfer of unique intangibles; or in multiple international transactions that are so interrelated they cannot be evaluated separately.

Under the transfer pricing rules, a taxpayer can adopt either contribution PSM, where the entire system profits are split among the various AEs who are parties to the transaction or RPSM, where each of the AEs who are parties to the transaction is given a pre-designed basic return for the routine functions performed by them, and thereafter the residual profits are split among the AEs.

Where RPSM is adopted, the Tribunal held that in the first stage the profits need to be split among the AEs on the basis of reliable external market data, which indicates how unrelated parties have split the profits in similar circumstances. At the first stage, benchmarking with reliable external market data is to be done. In this step, the combined net profits are partially allocated to each enterprise so as to provide it with an appropriate base return keeping in view the nature of the transaction.

The residual profits may be split on per relative contribution of the AEs, which need not be benchmarked by external market or comparable data. However, a scientific methodology may be applied for allocating the residual profits.

Based on the facts of the case, the Tribunal upheld in favor of the taxpayer the use of RPSM at the MAA.
