

Cobb EMC linemen suit up for safety

Cobb EMC's team of line workers cover more than 9,000 miles of power lines for our members in Cobb, Cherokee, Fulton, Bartow and Paulding Counties.

But keeping our linemen safe doesn't come easy. Dangerous situations are commonplace for this dedicated team, so making sure each is outfitted with proper safety equipment is a crucial priority. Take a look at what goes into suiting up our own first class linemen—step 2. Ian Hansman, who maintains lines in our service districts.

At Cobb EMC, we want all of our members to understand how we operate and what's involved in bringing power into your homes and businesses. It takes a team to provide safe, reliable electricity to our members. Our line crews play a key role in helping keep the lights on, and a dedicated group of employees work behind the scenes as well. Stay tuned for more profiles in our reliability series.

Did you know?
A lineman's gear weighs about 50 pounds. That's a lot of extra weight!

Hard hat: A hard, plastic hat features a wide brim to keep debris out of a lineman's face. Inside slots are universal to fit a flame-retardant liner and accessories like ear protection. Each lineman inspects his hat routinely for damage and durability and replaces it before it incurs wear and tear.

Safety glasses: These protect the eyes and deflect any debris that makes it past the hard hat, particularly materials that fly or splatter like molten metal.

Rubber gloves: A lineman first dons insulated rubber gloves for protection from electrical currents. He then layers leather gloves with vinyl cuffs to prevent cuts from sharp objects. As the voltage levels with which a lineman works increase, gloves are supplied in increasing thickness. Arm protector sleeves tuck inside gloves to protect the lineman's arms from contact with power lines as he works.

Safety belt: This belt wraps around the pole while the lineman is climbing and is secured to his waist by two metal D-rings.

Work boots: These boots weren't made for walking ... The steel or ceramic-toe boots are sturdily designed to protect the foot and include extra arch support for nimble climbing. Gaff climbers, which wrap around work boots, have triangular points that jab into poles, stabilizing a line worker as he climbs. And for added safety, gaff climbers attach to the strap set, located around the calf and ankle.

Clothing: Shirts and pants are flame-retardant and made with non-metallic buttons.

Body belt: A sturdy leather/synthetic belt is designed with utility in mind. It holds up the tool pouch and the safety belt.

Tool pouch: This leather satchel attaches to the body belt and keeps hand tools accessible.

Arctic coat: When most of us are taking cover during winter storms, our line maintenance team is braving the elements. Water repellent duck fabric is lined with nylon-quilted polyester to keep any water from seeping into the coat. Even the zipper has a windproof flap. Hook and loop closures on both the zipper and breast pockets and drawstring waist and sleeve cuffs keep our team bundled up and dry in inclement weather.

Safety harness: This full-body harness is used when a lineman works in an elevated bucket. It attaches to the boom of the bucket truck by a lanyard with locking snap hooks and prevents the line worker from falling, no matter how high in the air he may be.

Hinged hot stick: This long, insulated fiberglass tool enables a lineman to precisely and accurately install and remove live electrical equipment from a safe distance.

*Not shown: Safety harness, hinged hot stick and arctic.
