Abstract This research was designed to assess the impact of the 1994 National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) election rule changes on the rate of unionization in the United States. The study was based on a sample of 1,000 firms in the manufacturing sector. The results indicate that the rate of unionization has increased significantly since 1994, and that the increase is primarily due to the NLRB's new election procedures. The study also found that the rate of unionization is higher in firms that are unionized, and that the rate of unionization is higher in firms that are unionized by the NLRB. The study concludes that the NLRB's new election procedures have had a significant impact on the rate of unionization in the United States.

Abstract: This paper examines the impact of the 1996 Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA) on the employment of low-skilled workers. The paper finds that the act has had a significant impact on the employment of low-skilled workers, particularly in the manufacturing sector. The act has led to a decline in the employment of low-skilled workers in the manufacturing sector, while the employment of low-skilled workers in the service sector has increased. The paper also finds that the act has led to a decline in the employment of low-skilled workers in the public sector, while the employment of low-skilled workers in the private sector has increased. The paper concludes that the act has had a significant impact on the employment of low-skilled workers, and that the impact is likely to continue in the future.
