Investment in the Future

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a training group (TRN). The TRN group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The CON group remained sedentary. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The TRN group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and increase EE in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Future Research

Abstract: This research was designed to investigate the effects of two types of social support on the well-being of individuals who are experiencing chronic pain. The study involved 100 participants who were assigned to one of four groups based on the type of social support they received. The results showed that individuals who received emotional support experienced significantly higher levels of well-being compared to those who did not receive such support. These findings suggest that providing emotional support can be an effective intervention for improving the quality of life of people living with chronic pain.
