

The tax creates a market distortion since both consumers and suppliers would have benefitted from consuming and selling Q rather than Q_1 . Every pen sold/consumed between Q_1 and Q would add to overall societal surplus but the tax prevents these transactions from taking place. Since these lost units do result in tax revenue going to government, society is worse off.

- Many of my students find the concept of deadweight loss rather frustrating and difficult to intuitively grasp. "Yeah, but when do areas B and D go?!" Well, they go "poof". Disappear. "Be WHERE?!" This can go on for a long time. Then I tell the story of losing one's wallet in the forest. If I lose a wallet with $200 in it but somebody else finds it, then society is in fact just as well off since my loss has been offset by someone else's gain. However, if I lose the wallet and $20 is eaten by hungry squirrels and the rest is found, my loss is not entirely offset by someone else's gain. The $20 went "poof". This is the net loss of consumer surplus.

A deadweight loss is an efficiency loss to society since societal surplus is decreased without a corresponding gain for another actor in society. It is the net loss of consumer surplus and supplier surplus.
