

Wellness comes from a commitment to a lifestyle of managing stress, eating healthy, and exercising regularly. Physical fitness is one component of wellness. Physical fitness is the ability to perform the most work with the least effort. Improved fitness requires an exercise program for cardiovascular endurance, flexibility, muscular endurance, and muscular strength. People who exercise regularly are stronger, more flexible, recover from hard work or illness more quickly, live longer, and, more importantly, have a better quality of life. A fit person is at a low risk for both fatigue and hypokinetic disease. (Hypokinetic diseases include, but are not limited to, heart disease, hypertension, arthritis, etc.) A fit person looks good, feels good, enjoys physical activity, and effectively deals with the stress of daily life. A commitment to fitness has been shown to:

- Relieve tension and stress
- Stimulate the mind
- Reduce body fat
- Control appetite
- Boost self-image
- Improve muscle tone and strength
- Improve performance
- Lower blood pressure
- Improve sleep
- Improve flexibility
- Lower cholesterol
- Increase resistance to illness

How to recognize and measure fitness

There are eleven components that measure fitness. Six of these components are related to skill and sport, and five of these components are related to health. The fitness tests given by High School District 211 measure health-related fitness.

Measures of Health-Related Fitness:

Body-composition is the make-up of the body in fat, muscle, bone, and other tissue. Fat is expressed in percent (%) of body fat. The total of all other components is expressed in percent (%) of lean body mass.

Cardiovascular fitness is the ability of the heart, lungs and blood vessels to supply blood and oxygen to the body during long periods of exercise. The mile run measures cardiovascular fitness.

Flexibility is the ability to move a joint through a full range of motion. The sit and reach test measures flexibility of the lower spine.

Muscular endurance is the ability of a muscle or muscle group to continue work over a long period of time. The one minute sit-up test measures muscular endurance of the abdominals.

Muscular strength is the maximum amount of force a muscle or muscle group can exert. The pull-up test measures upper-body strength.
